Andrew N. Liveris Building project

Project snap shot –August 2019 – January 2020

Construction work on the Andrew N. Liveris Building began in June 2018, with completion expected in early 2021.

- For information about the building works and photos showing the project progress, see the road and building works website.
- Read more about the building project in UQ News \(6 April 2018 - Historic gift from Andrew and Paula Liveris\).

The Andrew N. Liveris Building \(PDF, 123KB\) will:

- support one of UQ's most consistently high-performing schools with a history of significant research outcomes, industry engagement, innovation and impactful alumni
- set a new standard in flexible and shared laboratory accommodation at UQ, with an open plan allowing maximum opportunity for undergraduates, postgraduates and staff to interact and experience a research-led educational experience
- significantly increase the university's available supply of flat-floor, flexible teaching rooms for flipped-classroom and problem-based learning
- be UQ's flagship space, integrating innovative teaching with interdisciplinary and solutions-focused research
- support active learning, further developing UQ's global reputation as a leader in these activities
- act as a vibrant hub for industry and interdisciplinary collaboration to address global challenges in areas such as energy, water and sustainable manufacturing
- inspire students, research scholars and staff alike and enable industry partners to participate in the learning and discovery process
- garner international attention and be a physical representation of the excellence that has defined UQ Engineering for over 100 years.
